LONG TERM CREDIT.

THE HARD TIMES THE CAUSE OF IT

The Wholesalers, Too, Are in Many Cases Requiring Cash or its Equivalent for Goods-The Retailers Compelled to do Likewise-Old Established and Wealthy Houses Continue to Sell on Credit.

Stories of returning good times, and tables showing about the usual number of men at work in the mills and factories of Wheeling and vicinity, do not hold water when held up in deadly parallel with the condition of business in the retail lines that supply the workingman with his provisions and clothing. A number of retail stores have recently almost entirely shut down on the credit system, and require cash or its equivalent for foods sold.

This condition of alfairs has been brought about by the inability of the retailers to collect outstanding accounts and the consequent difficulty the morchants have in settling with the wholesalers. The latter, many of them, have shut down on long term credit, thus in a measure compelling the retailer to sell for cash.

For cash.

Some of the old esteblished and wealthy retail firms continue to extend the usual credit to their customers, but firms not well "heeled" of course cannot do this.

THIS WEEK'S MARKETS,

Wool remains at the quotations given by Horkheimer Bros. several weeks ago, but just as soon as it is an assured fact that wool is to be on the free list—and that will be when the tariff bill is signed that will be when the tariff bill is signed by Mr. Cleveland—the quotations will take a considerable tumble.

The warm weather has exerted an in-dustrions influence on the hens of the country, and a result is the decreased price of eggs, twelve cents a dozen, cheaper than they have been quoted lo-cally since last summer. Hogs, too, have declined as they always do in the hot weather. Cattle on the other hand went no a per. went up a peg.

Timothy and clover seed is in big de-

Timothy and clover seed is in big demand just now, a few weeks earlier than is usually the case; the farmers are taking advantage of the phenomenal advanced spell of warm weather.

Very few Florida and southern vegetables continue countg into the Wheeling markets, simply because the mass of the people are not indulging in fancy knick-knacks in the way of food or anything else, for that matter. Cabbages are the best sellers, and at quotations which last year would have been ruinous. The Georgia "cracker" and the Florida "truck man" are not making fortunes these days.

In any agency or office where any company paying more than 15 per cent commission is represented."

This was regarded as unfair to the Wheeling companies, which pay local agents 20 per cent. The agents here naturally objected to the agreement, but the foreign companies insisted upon it, and what the final outcome will be remains in doubt.

"I read that one bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla would convince mo of its merits, and I have found this statement to be stirtly true.

"Some two years ago two uteers appeared on my hip, which, after being sore a long time, broke and discharged. I niso was attacked with sciatic rheumatism, my leg being drawn so that I could hardly get around the house. I hardly knew what a good night's rest was. The hip trouble caused me great trouble and annoyance, and occurs a timested on my hands. Natisalike. and cezema appeared on my hands. Naturally I began to run down, was weak and low spirit-I began to run down, was weak and low spirit-ed. The physician told me my hip would have to be operated upon before I would get any better. At last I decided to take one tottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla. In three weeks my rheumatism entirely disappeared and I found that

[Continued from First Page.] counsel, warmed up to the old time fire counsel, warmed up to the old time fire which had been expected of him and oagerly anticipated. He faced Mr. Butterworth, putting to him categorically question after question designed to bring out the fact of Colonel Breckinders, and the secret marriage in New York. This marriage was admitted by Mr. Butterworth, who said it was not in question.

"Do you admit the secret marriage?" inquired Mr. Wilson sternly.

"We admit the marriage—leave out the word secret—by Kev. Dr. Paxton on the 29th of April."

"You do not deny that it was secret?"

"That is immaterial."

"You do not deny that your client instructed Dr. Paxton to keep it secret?"

If o proceeded to argue that since the secret marriage was admitted it made no difference about any threats his client might have made after that marriage, or anything she had done, since that did not concern the case, as he had already broken the contract to marry her, and whatever happened after the contract had been broken was alien to the case.

alter to contract had been broked was alten to the case.

Judge Bradley overruled him, since the matter should have been brought in on direct examination.

HER STORY OF IT.

The story of the attempt to shoot Colone! Breckinridge in New York was

This was the day following his secret marriage to Mrs. Wing J

"On Sunday night he came to tell me with a great flush of triumph that a company had been formed to include Mr. Whitney and Mr. Fairchild and all the prominent capitalists, with a capital of $30,000,000, for some sort of railroad scheme. He was to represent them and might have to go to Europe right away; went out and came back next day near noon saying: 'Madeline, leaves and you get ready to marry next day near noon saying: 'Madeline, how soon can you get ready to marry me? I may have to leave to-morrow for how soon can you get ready to marry me? I may have to leave to-morrow for Europe, suddenly.

"I said: 'Willie, I can marry you right away.'

"After he had gone again, I found a revolver in his travelling sack, and it awakened my suspicions because he had told me so many lies. I had telephoned to Mr. Whitney and Mr. Fairchild and found that they had not seen him, and did not expect to. I found that there was no private car on the track where he said there was one waiting for him."

Mr. Butterworth—"Did he act as through he was in his right mind?"

"As much so as he has any day since then." [Laughter.]

"He acted so queerly that my suspicions were aroused. I am not surprised now, considering the position he was in. I was pregnant then. I said, 'Are you going to keep your solemn promise to marry me. If not, I am going to shoot you and myself with the revolver I found in your bag.'

He said: "My darling, I am going to marry you, and that on the last of this month. After that he wrote me a solemn letter renewing his promise to marry une."

Mr. Butterworth, interrupting—"Have

Mr. Butterworth, interrupting—"Have you that letter?'

A DRAMATIC SCENE. Miss Pollard raised her arm impressively while overy man in court leaned forward to catch her reply.

"He took it away from me," she said, "on the 17th day of May with the vilest, vilest lie."

After the letter was written and before the 16th day of May, Miss Pollard continued, Colonel Breckinrldgo had sent her flowers and had talked to her of their future married life together.

Speaking of this meeting, she said, pointing her finger directly at the white haired congressmen sitting with his head bowed on his breast and the eyes of the room full of men focussed upon him: "I think I saw something nearer a look of pity on his face that day than I had ever seen before. I think he had a conscience on that day, and was really sorry for what he had done."

"Did you and he ever, have any scenes before these unfortunate occurrences?" Mr. Butterworth asked.

"Life could not be altogether pleasant with any one living with Colonel Breckinridge. People had sent me anonymous letters telling of his relations with colored women." [Laughter.] Mr. Butterworth then veered around his cross questioning to the visit of Miss Pollard's, story of these visits differed in a few minor details from the recital of Major Moore, and was in great elaboration. She had gone to the house in Jefferson Place where Mr. Breckinridge was stopping with Mrs. Wing.

HE CAME.

She strode into the room where

She strode into the room where they were and both of them cowered behind the door. Reproducing the imperative tone in which she had spoken, Miss Pollard continued: "I said to him 'Come with me, Willie," and

Major Moore remonstrated that it could not be so bad as that, and Colonel Breckinridge had told him then that he had been intimate with her and that

Breckinridge had told him then that he had been intimate with her and that she had berne him two children. She had remonstrated with him, saying, "Willie, why is it necessary to tell all these things?" He had stepped over to her to put his arm around and quiet her, and had then repeated his remark to the chief, "Major, this is one of the tracedies of life."

This characteristic remark, reproduced in something of the original manner, raised another irresistable laugh.

From this line of testimony Mr. Butterworth turned his questions to a di-rection designed to show that Miss Pol-lard had held Colonel Breckinridge under a reign of terror.

lard had held Colonel Breesinringe under a reign of terror.

"Did he not generally come when you called?" he asked, but she said that on the contrary she had always obeyed his slightest wish, because she had trusted him and loved him dearly through these nine years.

"Had not Colonel Breckinridge often endeavored to break off the relations with you?" Mr. Butterworth asked, "and had he not promised to give you $125 a month if you would go to Germany?" All this she denied, declaring that he had importuned her to stay by protestations of his love which she wished the court could have heard. She told how he had talked to ber that night before he left her last spring, tell-She told how he had talked to her that night before he left her last spring, tell-

Mr. Butterworth asked if it had not Mr. Butterworth asked if it had not always been in her power to ruin Colonel Breckinridge, to which she replied with emphasis: "I had that power, but I never made a threat to him in my life. I never pressed a thumb screw on him until he had it in his power to keep his promise to me and broke it."

Whon she was asked what were the things which Colonel Breckinridge had said of Mrs. Wing, Miss Pollard refused said of Mrs. Wing, Miss Pollard refused to renest them, saying she would not talk that way of another woman and would not be preased. Again, when asked if he had not suggested that they break their relations oil, she struck the witness stand a blow with her open hand, exclaiming, "No, never, never, there was never such a word hinted at on his part," and she continued in a voice choking with sobs:

"I gave up my habies for him because he insisted on it. He said that if I kept them they would surely be traced to him. A woman can't do more than that, she can't do more than give up her own child. I laid my baby in its coffin, because it needed a mother's care which I had not been able to give it, because he made me put it away from me. I—never—let—him—see—me—ory—over—it. I—never—never—

There was suspicious moisture in many eyes. No man in the court room broke the silence by a whisper, until Mr. Wilson suggested that the court should adjourn.

Mr. Butterworth, speaking in a low tone, said that he had but few more questions, but perhaps they had better be asked in the morning.

The harsh voice of the crier broke the solemnity of the scene, adjourning sourt.

Sourt.

Colonel Breckinridge turned around and smiled what was probably a forced smile, for he walked from the court room to the office of his lawyers with his head bent in a dejected way, his hat in his hand, letting the cool breeze strike his silvery looks. his silvery locks, which caught the eyes of all passers who turned to follow him with their glances as he strode ahead of his little party, speaking to no one.
